INTRODUCTION

In the early 1870s Claremont, the midway point on the Perth to Fremantle Road, began to attract speculators and investors who bought up large tracts of land. One such investor was James Morrison who ran a livestock business on his land and sold a piece of this land for railway purposes. It appears that Morrison also gave Claremont its name, however it is unclear whether he named it after his wife Clara and the hilly location 'Mont' or whether the area was named after an English Royal Palace.

The heart of Claremont lies between the railway line and the Perth to Fremantle Road. It was in this area that the residential and business districts became concentrated. The influence of the railway station played an important part in the settlement of Claremont, the expansion of its commercial heart and also encouraged investment in the area. Early advertisements marketed Claremont as 'the Toorak of Perth' and its close proximity to the railway line was touted as a major attraction.

[8] CLAREMONT DRAPERS (44 BAY VIEW TCE)

This building had been a tailors or a drapery from 1914/15 to 2006. Owing to the building being sold and rising rents, the Claremont Drapers closed in 2006. In 1965 Norman Palmer acquired an interest in the business and named it the Claremont Drapers. The business was so successful that the name

[4] BOVELL'S (24 BAY VIEW TCE)

During the Depression Millie Bovell began this famous business by selling her homemade sponges, pies and pasties from a pram she pushed around the streets of Claremont. By 1932 Bovell's opened at 24 Bay View Tce in front of her house where three generations of the family made the famous pies. At one point the pies became so popular that a large wicker basket full of pies was sent by train each day to be sold at the Fremantle Train Station dining rooms. Unfortunately, the increased rents along Bay View Terrace forced the longstanding business to sell its last pie in November 1987.

[10] ST QUENTIN AVENUE

The 'Square Man'

Originally called Divers Street, it was re-named St Quentin Avenue in 1925 to commemorate an Australian victory during the First World War. The street was originally mainly residential although Tom the Cheap Grocer was trading there. Competition from Coles supermarket in the early 1970s forced Tom the Cheap to close its doors and the next twenty five years would see the expansion of businesses into what had, up until then, been mainly a residential street.

[6] FURNISS BUILDING (43 BAY VIEW TCE)

Built in 1927, the Furniss Building was owned by Mr W. Furniss, known to many by the name of 'Cocky'. On the ground floor of the building was the Furniss Cycle Shop which retailed its own bicycle called the "Scarlet Runner". However, it is remembered chiefly for the large life-size figure in sheet metal, seated on a bicycle, mounted on a beam above > the laneway next door. This brightly painted figure was known as the 'tin man', although the Furniss family maintains that he signified their motto "A Square Man for a Square Deal". The Square Man is now in the Claremont Museum collection. The Furniss Building was demolished in 1973.

Jacobson's Pharmacy was built by Mr A.E. Golder in 1925 and his daughter, Miss Golder, also a pharmacist. They could be summoned down to the shop by the night bell to the right of the doorway to dispense emergency prescriptions. In 1945 Edith Adlard, nee Jacobson, acquired the pharmacy and lived in the quarters upstairs. She qualified as a pharmacist in 1927 and co-founded the WA Womens' Pharmacy Association. She worked for fifty years in her profession and was the first female pharmacist in WA to manage a pharmacy. She was awarded the Member of Order of Australia in 1987. After retiring, she wrote 'Tincture and Tact' published in 1982, covering her career as a pharmacist, and also containing light-hearted anecdotes of characters in Claremont.

[11] THE TOWN HALL (327 STIRLING HWY)

Claremont Town Hall's history began in 1922. It was in this year that the Methodists laid the foundation stone of a new building to replace their old weatherboard church which stood next door.

By 1977 the size of the Claremont Parish had reduced and it was decided that the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches would combine and become the Uniting Church, now located at St Aidan's on Princess Road. Town of Claremont later bought the church and converted it into Claremont Town Hall. Sir Richard Trowbridge, the Governor, officially opened it in October 1983.

[2] POST OFFICE (2 BAY VIEW TCE)

The Claremont Post and Telegraphic Office was constructed in 1896. The building, designed by Government Architect George Temple-Poole, incorporated residential quarters for the postmaster. Susan Commerford, one of the first women to make a career in the postal service, was the first Postmistress appointed to the new Claremont Post Office. The Post Office was located directly opposite the railway station which enabled the regular and quick dispatch of bags of mail to the city and other

[7] CORDIN'S MEAT CO. (47-49 BAY VIEW TCE)

Cordin's Meat Co. located at 47-49 Bay View Terrace, was a two storey building built in 1914. It contained a butchers shop and a handy foods shop; and living accommodation for the family was located above. A gold bull's head was mounted on the upper balcony. The ice works was situated in a large building at the rear of the shops, with access from Stirling Highway. The huge ice making machinery was brought in by George Lucas on a horse-drawn lorry and was so heavy that his horses went down on their knees pulling it up the slope from the Highway. Ice was delivered to the district by large horse-drawn carts and later motor vans. Cordin's meat delivery cart, dating from the early 1900s, was restored in 1979 and is now in the Claremont Museum collection.

[3] CLAREMONT HOTEL (1 BAY VIEW TCE)

Edward Massey established the hotel in 1902. Originally the hotel was residential and its close proximity to the railway station made it an attractive place to stay. There is no doubt that the hotel's busiest period was during Royal Show week when it would literally burst at the seams. When private motor vehicle ownership became more common the hotel lost its residential component evolving into a local pub and more recently a trendy meeting place.

[14] TRANSPORTATION

Claremont was very isolated and for many years the river remained the main mode of transport until convict labour was employed to build the road linking Fremantle to Perth. In 1881 the railway line opened and many of the Claremont businesses used the railway service to transport goods.

In 1924 a tram car service was opened with trams travelling regularly between Claremont Railway Station and Waratah Avenue. The tram service closed in 1935 as it was unable to compete with trolley buses which were introduced in 1931.

[1] CLAREMONT RAILWAY STATION

The Perth-Fremantle railway line opened in 1881 and the station master's house, designed by George Temple Poole, was constructed in 1886. Temple Poole is considered the most eminent architect working in WA during the federation period.

When the Royal Show moved to Claremont in 1905 the railway station was expanded to cater for the increase in traffic. A new signal cabin was built in 1906 and the signalmen were responsible for ensuring that trains went to the correct platforms. At that time there were five platforms, a goods yard and sidings. These were demolished in the 1980s. The signal cabin is now the only surviving, traditional all-lever signal cabin still in its original location in the Perth metropolitan area.

Claremont Railway Station was important for the movement of troops during World Wars I and II. During WWII virtually all enlisted troops passed through the Claremont Showgrounds and most military trains departed from Claremont Railway Station. Olive Copley resided at the station master's house during WWII and recalls the troop trains passing through. Soldiers would drop envelopes with coins onto the platform and Olive and her sister would collect them, buy postage stamps with the coins and post the soldiers' letters.

[12] DRILL HALL (AVION WAY)

From 1912 to 1914, Mr Bernard Stein operated a roller skating rink. After 1914, it became a drill hall and headquarters of the Claremont Citizen Force. After WWII, the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF) had an Air Training Corps based here. In 1986, the RAAF transferred to Belmont and the land was sold. In early 1990, the site was turned into European style individual shops with a large car parking area on the upper levels. As a result of a newspaper competition, won by Mrs Andrea Saunders of Grange Street, the new street was named Avion Way, to reflect the earlier connection with the RAAF.

[13] MYOLA CLUB (6 STIRLING RD)

Myola is an Aboriginal word meaning 'place of knowledge' or 'meet and learn.' The Myola Club began in 1921 to coach a group of women in the art of speech making and chairing meetings. In 1935 they moved into their own building at 6

Stirling Road Claremont. The club had a choir, a reading circle and a drama group and held craft classes, formal dances and wedding receptions as

[8] DRABBLES (46-48 & 50 BAY VIEW TCE)

Princess Theatre and Concert Hall was built in 1914, by Mr W.Drabble. The building was designed by Claremont architect, D.McClure. It was used as a cinema and concert hall for dances, school prizegivings and other functions. The building featured two halls; a large hall, which accommodated up to 650 people, included a gallery and dress circle and a 'lesser hall' on the first floor. A grand polished jarrah staircase led to the gallery. The cinematographer's room was fire-proof and was concealed so that it was of 'no annoyance to the audience'. There was also an outside picture garden behind the theatre off Leura Avenue. The site was redeveloped in 1977 and is now known as Old Theatre Lane.
